I don't remember much about my first journey to the castle only the final ascent through the autumn trees as we drove along the winding road that lead to the gateway I vaguely recall the sense of damp woodland and glimpses of picturesque views.

I expect Mrs Higgins was waiting to receive us at the entrance. Perhaps Mr Higgins who worked in the gardens was there too, although I can't actually remember on that particular occasion.

What I definitely do recall was waking the next morning in an unfamiliar bed and listening to the barely audible murmur of the wind in the trees.

For a child like me brought up in the city living in a castle was a marvelous adventure, I thrived in the new environment and developed a real curiosity about everything around me.

I thought then and I still think now I was so privileged to be living in such a gorgeous region.
